DELIGE IS BAPTIZED PRAYS LOUDLY IN CELL

Confessed Murderer of Mrs. Baudis Converted by Rev. P. E. Paul.

CRIES OUT IN ANGUISH

Calls on Lord to Forgive His Sins and Keep Soul of Murdered Woman in Glory—His Trial During Week of Dec. 5 Will be Short.

Bert Delige, whose confession that he murdered Mrs. John Baudis, of Scotia, was published exclusively on Tuesday morning in "The Republican," has been converted and today he will be baptized by his pastor, Rev. P. E. Paul, pastor of the A. M. E. church.

Since his confession Delige has spent many hours on his knees in prayer, calling loudly to Jesus to forgive him for his sins and asking that the poor, murdered woman's soul may rest in glory. Mr. Paul was present on the night Delige broke down and confessed to the murder and since that time he has frequently been in close council with his pastor.

Delige is under heavy guard, lest he attempt to kill himself. John Trafford is serving as a special guard over the prisoner. Reports that Delige has threatened suicide are positively denied by his keepers.

Regarding the suspicion that he might have also killed John Baudis, the merry-go-round man and husband of the murdered woman, at Williamsport several months ago, Delige yesterday said:

"I didn't have anything to do with that. I wasn't in the old man's tent that night. He had been drinking and I guess he just killed himself."

This is the first statement made by Delige regarding the rumors linking his name with the tragic death of John Baudis.

Delige's confession virtually ends the case, so far as further investigation is concerned. Under the Pennsylvania laws a trial will be necessary, although since Delige has admitted the crime this will be of short duration and the county will be relieved of the great cost which would have resulted from a hard-fought trial.

It will be necessary to formally arraign Delige, empanel a jury, prove that Mrs. Baudis was killed and hear Delige's confession. It will then be necessary that the jury retire and return a verdict of murder in the first degree, after which sentence will be imposed by Judge Orvis. Unless unlooked for emergency should arise, Delige will be executed in the county jail yard some time in January or February.

According to Mr. Paul, Delige is fully repentant and realizes that he must be hanged for his crime. To the minister Delige has repeatedly declared that he has nothing more to tell, that all he now is trying to do is to prepare himself for the end.

It was Monday night when Mr. Paul was summoned to Delige's cell in the jail. The minister responded, being accompanied by Delige'e sister. A moment or two after Mr. Paul's arrival Delige broke down and wept, confessing that he had committed the brutal murder and blaming all on his being drunk at the time.

After hearing Delige's confession, Mr. Paul carefully explained that the doomed man must tell all if he hoped for salvation. With voice broken by emotion, Delige replied that he had concealed nothing and that he had told everything there was to tell. Mr. Paul tells this graphic story of what followed in Delige's cell:

"I told the poor man that he must make up his mind to die, that he would have to die for what he had done and that his only hope for salvation was by confessing all. Delige told me over and over again that he had confessed everything. He said that he had killed the poor woman and that he was sorry.

"I started to pray but I had not got very far when Delige took it from me and prayed in a most wonderful and repentant way. He called on Jusus to save him and to forgive him for killing that poor, innocent woman. 'That poor, innocent woman, Lord, keep her soul in glory while I'm here in this terrible place,' he cried out. He prayed louder and louder and louder and I told him it wasn't necessary that he pray so loud, that the Lord was nearby and that if he was sincerely repentant the Lord would hear and forgive.

"When I left the cell Delige was still on his knees, in prayer. He appeared to be very penitent. I never saw the man before that night. When I was called to go to him I believed it was my duty to do. I do not condone his offense. If a man is guilty of such a crime, his color means nothing to me. I am not that type of minister. My duty is to help those needing help. After spending some time with Delige I became convinced of his desire to find forgiveness for his sins. I went there hoping to save his soul. If I can save but one soul that alone is worth all my ministry. I wanted to save the soul of this poor man and when I left the cell that first night I believed that he was on the way to being saved. I don't believe that anybody seeing him as I saw him could doubt this."

Delige has made a much more detailed confession than that published in another column. This, however, will be closely guarded until he is brought to trial during the week of December 5. From what may helearned it tells substantially the same story as that published in the special edition of "The Republican", on Tuesday morning, and which is related in more detail in the statement published today.

As related in the special edition of "The Republican" in which the first announcement of Delige's confession was made, the negro lost his nerve and collapsed on being confronted with the razor with which he killed Mrs. Baudis. Delige had staked everything on the razor remaining hidden under the tree stump, where he secreted it a few hours after his mad race away from the scene of the crime. He believed that the razor would never be found and that so long as it was missing it would be impossible to convict him. He was so sure of this that he failed to fortify himself with any other theory of defense. When he was suddenly confronted with the missing razor, the one prop on which he had been leaning collapsed. Solitary confinement in the jail had told on his nerve. Alone day and night, living in a silence that was terrifying to the extreme, he was unable to withstand the shock when the missing razor was flashed before his eyes, and he went to pieces.

Once his heretofore nerve of steel had deserted him, Delige was all in. He stood as he told of the crime, but the strain which he had been under became too great and finally his knees weakened and he swayed as if he was about to fall. A chair was hastily brought to his cell and while seated he finished telling of the murder.

Delige's assertion that his only reason for killing Mrs. Baudis was that he was drunk is not accepted by many persons who have closely followed the developments of the case. The one theory most generally believed is that he was revengeful because the woman owed him $15 or $16. His statement that he never asked her for this money is not only not accepted but by members of the murdered woman's family it is asserted that Delige not only demanded the money but made threats against Mrs. Baudis because of her failure to pay him. She failed to pay him because of her poverty. Time and again she told him that he would be paid as soon as she might get the money.

That Delige again demanded the money on the night of the crime and, failing to get it, became enraged and killed Mrs. Baudis, is the belief of the people of Scotia. From the time of the murder everybody at Scotia believed that Delige was guilty.

Delige's Complete Confession.

Confession of Bert Delige, made on Tuesday, November 22nd., 1910, in the jail of Centre County, in the presence of Fred Reese, Deputy Sheriff.

I Bert Delige make this a full statement, so far as I can remember, about the killing of Mrs. Baudis at Scotia, October 16th., 1910.

Saturday evening I went to Pine Top, stayed there Saturday night and Sunday all day. George Mayhew, Bud Delige, Aaron Delige, Bud Dixon, Teddy Delige, Tom Miller, Grant Jones, Mrs. Jones and Isaac Lykens were all there. We had whiskey, beer and some cider to drink. We had two four gallon kegs of beer, but could not say just how much of the other two drinks we had. I drank some beer and quite a lot of whiskey and some cider but do not know just how much. We kept that up all day Sunday. Sunday evening we started for home, but can't say just what time it was when we left. Harry Delige, George Mayhew and Teddy Delige started ahead of me; they went across the hill the near way. Aaron and I went up the railroad to Waddle station and then took the main road and went straight home.

When we got to the Red Row Mrs. Baudis came out of Wilson Ghaner's When we got just opposite Curry's gate Mrs. Baudis passed us we were both going the same direction, and she said good evening Aaron and good evening Bert. We both said good evening and she went on. She was walking right smart and went on towards Haughs store. Aaron and I turned off to the path that leads to our house. We went into the house and I stayed a little while, not very long and then started for Baudis'. I went up over the Church Hill and down a back road until I came to the main road that leads to Scotia. Then I went up the railroad, up the path that leads to the Company stable and down by Jacob Ghaner's shop, then on out the road to the mud dam, crossed the mud dam into the strip of woods, and then got on the main path again. From there I went up through the woods, crossed the fence, crossed the corn field and went over into the sod field. There I stopped. I had drunk so much that I could go no farther.

I think the three kinds of drink made me lose my head and when I saw Mrs. Baudis coming I just pushed her over and cut her throat. She screamed for help when I pushed her over, but I placed my hand on her forehead, pushed her back and cut her throat. I was standing back of her when I did it. Then I jumped over the fence ran across the mud dam, into the woods and on to the rail road. I went out a short distance, left the rail road and got on the main path which leads to the Boarding House. I turned off below the Boarding House and went down the main path until I came to a back road that leads to our house. When I came to a chestnut tree just below our house I threw the razor back of it and then went on to McKivisons.

Q. Why did you kill her, what was your motive?

A. Well I was just out of my head, I guess the three kinds of drink put me out of my head.

Q. Did you have any malice or ill will against her?

A. No, none whatever.

Q. Did she owe you any money?

A. Well yes, as near as I can figue it out she owed me about $15.00

Q. Di l she refuse to pay you?

A. I never asked her for it.

Q. Do you remember passing any people on your way down there?

A. No.

Q. You did not pass a buggy with two people in it?

A. No.

Q. Did you see anybody while you were crossing the mud dam, any children?

A. No.

Q. How did you carry this razor?

A. I carried it in my hand.

Q. Where did you wash your hands j

A. I washed them in the mud hole just before I hid the razor.

Q. Did you pass anybody on your way back?

A. No I heard some one but did not see anybody.

Q. What prompts you to make this confession now?

A. Well after the hearing I made up my mind that I would wait until after the trial and then after the testimony had all been given in I would make my confession. I wanted to hear just what they would say and how they would lie on me. But the crime was a weight on my soul and I wanted to be relieved of it. I have not yet been blessed but am striving for it under the directions of our colored minister Rev. Paul.

MOTHER BURNED SAVING CHILD AT SCOTIA FIRE

Mrs. John Curry Painfully Injured About Head, Face and Arms.

2 FAMILIES DESTITUTE

Driven from Homes Into Freezing Weather, Clad in Night Clothing—Early Morning Blaze Caused by Exploding Lamp.

Mrs. John Curry and her infant child of Scotia, had a narrow escape from being burned to death in a fire which, early Tuesday morning, completely destroyed two houses and all of the contents. The houses were occupied by the families of John Curry and Joesph Rearick. The fire was caused by an exploding lamp in the Curry home. Mrs. Curry was painfully burned about the head, face and arms while rescuing her child from the burning house. The child's hair was scorched but it was taken from the house before the flames had reached its clothing.

The two families were driven out into freezing weather, escaping with nothing but their night clothing. Every article in the two houses, including clothing, etc., was destroyed. In the two families are several children. On this day of Thanksgiving the people of Bellefonte are asked by the "The Republican" to send such assistance as they can to the two distressed families. Any assistance, including articles of clothing, etc., may be sent to "The Republican" office and we will see that it reaches the two families. Let the response be generous and immediate.

Mr. Curry operates one of the large excavators at the Scotia mines. On Tuesday morning he arose about 5 o'clock and after lighting a lamp in his home he started out to fire up the engine at the excavator, in order that steam would be up by the time he had finished his [illegible]. In some manner the lamp exploded, hurling the burning oil in all directions. The flames quickly spread and before help could be summoned the two houses were doomed.

Members of the two families, on being awakened by the crackling of the flames, rushed out of the houses clad in the scantiest of attire. Although the flames were upon her, Mrs. Curry remained behind to save her infant child, succeeding in this only after a narrow escape from being burned to death. Unmindful of the burns about her head, face and arms, she carried the child to a place safety.

In addition to losing his household effects, etc., Mr. Rearick had about $175 in cash burned. There was no insurance on the contents of either of the houses, both of which were owned by the Bellefonte Furnace Company.

Every man at Scotia hurried to the scene of the fire and endeavored to render all assistance possible, but the flames had gained too great headway and in a short time the two houses were burned to the ground.

5000 FINE TROUT

Were Placed in Spring Creek, in Bellefonte, Yesterday.

Five thousand male trout, measuring from seven to ten inches, were yesterday placed in Spring Creek, in Bellefonte. The dumping of the fish into the stream was watched with keen interest by many persons. To Clayton Brown and several other citizens is due the credit for securing the fish and stocking Spring Creek along points which come to the notice of visitors in town.

The trout were secured at the Bellefonte fish hatchery. Many of them, when first dumped into the stream, lay as if dazed, due to exhaustion from confinement in the shipping cans. In a few minutes they recovered and quickly disappeared. Indications are that next year Bellefonte will be one of the finest trout grounds in the State.

ORCHARD DEMONSTRATIONS

Schedule of Meetings in Centre County in December.

State Economic Zoologist H. A. Surface, at Harrisburg, has announced the schedule of model orchard demonstration meetings to be held in Centre County, in December, as follows:

December 14 and 15—Bellefonte, orchard of G. Edwin Haupt.

December 16 and 17—Zion, orchard of Howard T. Struble.

The demonstration meetings will be conducted by State inspectors T. C. Foster and Jas. Bergy. It is possible that Professor Surface will attend one or more of the meetings.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR HOSTS AT BRILLIANT FUNCTION

Elaborate Display Marks Annual Thanksgiving Reception.

300 POUNDS OF TURKEY

Famous American Bird Feature of Banquet Served by Gallant Knights—Armory Beautifnlly Decorated for the Occasion.

Knights Templar, arrayed in their striking uniforms, and accompanied by handsomely gowned women, to the number of upward of three hundred, last night participated in an elaborate Thanksgiving reception, dance and banquet at the Bellefonte Armory, the function being the largest and most brilliant given here in recent years.

In honor of the occasion the Armory was lavishly, but artistically, decorated and presented a pretty picture when the massive doors were swung open and the first of the guests passed down the receiving line. The reception was held at 8.30 o'clock. One-half hour later the floor was cleared for dancing. At 10 o'clock the banquet was served, the guests assembling in the basement hall and being divided into two groups. Here again the decorations won numerous expressions of praise, as did also the attractively arranged tables. In keeping with a time-honored custom, the banquet was served by the gallant Knights, and a royal good feast, it was, too. Three hundred pounds of turkey was one of many features.

The Armory, which has been the scene of so many pretty functions, never presented a more inspiring picture than when the gay function was at its height. Countless electric lights sparkled from overhead and about the walls on all four sides. Draping the walls were American flags, interfolded with festoons of blue [illegible] insignia of the order under whose auspices the function was held. Overhead was a waving mass of color, flags and bunting predominating and a pretty effect secured by means of handsome streamers leading from all four corners to the centre. Most conspicuous of all were the two familiar insignias, the cross and the triangle, the latter with the skull and cross bones, placed high on the walls at the rear of the hall and shining forth resplendent behind a myriad of miniature electric globes.

Two orchestras were provided by Christy Smith for the occasion; one being stationed in the centre of the main hall for the the reception and dance and the other in the banquet hall. During the recess there was a pretty solo by Mr. H. P. Armstrong. The programs were especially neat, showing much care in selection as well as in execution.

The several committees in charge of the function follow:

SQUIRE HOLDS SQUIRE ON CHARGE OF ASSAULT

Justice Brown, after Hearing, Sends Justice Musser to Court.

HICKORY CANE FIGURES

Defendant, Who is Not Required to Furnish Bail, Expresses Regret He Did Not Wield "Big Stick" More Vigorously on Roy Hall.

It isn't often that one Squire presides over a hearing where another Squire is the defendant, but that is what happened on Saturday morning, last. Squire W. H. Musser, advanced in years, endowed with the kindliest of faces and a pillar in the Methodist Episcopal church, was not only the defendant, but a defendant charged with assault and battery. Furthermore, it was charged that the assault, or attempted assault, was committed with Squire Musser's old hickory cane.

Roy Hall, of Milesburg, appeared as the prosecutor. Squire Brown has been a Squire but a short time, but he calmly surveyed the more experienceed and much older Squire Musser, listened to the evidence and rendered his decision. Had Squire Musser been willing to pay costs, amounting to $5 or $6, the case would have ended then and there, but he preferred taking it to Court, and that is where it was sent.

When the hearing was over and each side was still more or less perturbed and voicing righteous indignation, Squire Musser took occasion to deny that he had struck Hall with the cane, but that he was sorry he had not done so and that if such an occasion again presented itself he would wield his cane with all the vigor at his command.

According to Squire Musser, the trouble dates back a number of weeks. Hall lived in a house at Milesburg owned by [illegible] place. The trustees, through their attorney, directed that a landlord's warrant be served on Hall for a certain alleged indebtedness. Subsequently, Hall, accompanied by his counsel, Col. R. R. Chambers, visited Squire Musser's office and there claimed that Squire Musser had served the warrant. There were numerous denials and an exchange of compliments, the result being that Squire Musser finally grabbed his old hickory cane and ordered Hall out of the office. Hall, apparently, had no thought of leaving, whereupon Squire Musser made a rush for him. Colonel Chambers bravely jumped into the fray. He directed Hall to remain where he was and, moreover, assured him that he might call on him for help. He was about to call on Squire Musser to feel his muscle, but on second thought concluded that this would be unnecessary.

When Squire Musser was ready to admit that he couldn't throw them out, that he might have been able one day but that the said day had long ago slipped by, Hall, accompanied by his lawyer, marched out of the office. Squire Musser sat down to smooth over his ruffled feelings. Before he had quite succeeded in doing this, however, he was rudely disturbed, this time with an announcement that he was under arrest, that the charge was assault and battery and that the hearing would be before Squire Brown. Squire Musser's feelings once more became ruffled and the ruffles were still in evidence when he appeared at the hearing. They were somewhat in evidence as late as yesterday, but this is the day of Thanksgiving and the erstwhile genial Squire will no doubt forgive all hands and enjoy his turkey just the same as a fellow would who isn't under arrest and awaiting trial in Court.

Why We Give Thanks.

This is the day of Thanksgiving. We are thankful for the liberal support "The Republican" has received from our many friends during the last year. We are especially thankful for a large and constantly growing list of regular readers. That each and every friend of "The Republican" may today be filled with the spirit of Thanksgiving is our earnest wish and hope.

STRANGE BODY OF WATER

Estimated That Great Salt Lake, Utah, Contains Seven Billion Tons of Salt.

In glacial times Great Salt Lake was a magnificent fresh-water lake the size of Lake Huron, that is, about 18,000 square miles, and had its outlet into the Port Neuf, the Snake and the Columbia rivers. This was at least 10,000 years ago, but since that time, says the Youth's Companion, the climate has become arid, and not enough water has fallen over the Great Basin to supply that lost by evaporation. Consequently the lake has ceased to flow from its outlet, and gradually dried up from over a thousand feet deep to 15 feet, and from 18,000 square miles in area to less than 1,700.

It is now 70 miles long and about 30 wide, but is beautiful still, and is the home of myriads of seabirds and other water fowl. It is the great resort of the people of Utah, for from 3,000 to 5,000 visit its shores daily in the summer, and many bathe in its waters. The lake is salty, like all lakes that have no outlet. It contains about 7,000,000,000 tons of salt.

When the lake is high the salt is so diluted that it has gone down to 11 per cent. When it is low, as it was not many years ago, it reached saturation which for the mixed ingredients of the water is 36 per cent. It is now about 21 per cent.

There is nothing mysterious about it any more than there would be about a teacup with a teaspoonful of salt in the bottom. If a tablespoonful of water were put in the cup on the salt it would taste very salty, but if the cup were filled to the brim with water it would not.

The salt has come from the water of the rivers flowing into it since it ceased to flow from its outlet. All river water contains salt, and the annual evaporation of from two to five cubic miles of this water leaves large quantities of salt behind; and so it has accumulated for thousands of years.

Many years ago the great value of the lake in the study of meteorology was appreciated, and so for over a generation its waters have been the subject of most careful observation and study. These observations began in 1843, and are continued today by semimonthly observations. Its oscillations have been tabulated and compared with the rainfall, temperatures, and so forth. It is known that the lake falls in summer and rises in winter and spring, due to the evaporation in summer and the rainfall and winter snows. Its annual rise is about 17 inches, and its fall the same. In cool seasons or those with an extra rainfall the evaporation will not equal the inflow, and so the lake will rise more than it falls. It generally rises a foot for

A tabulation of its oscillations for nearly 69 years shows that these periods of rise and fall follow the rainfall and go in cycles. Every two and a half to three years the lake will rise, and in the next similar period will fall; then every nine to eleven years there is a still larger period; and every 25 years or thereabouts a grand cycle. In the grand cycle the lake is about 16 feet higher than it was at the beginning, and then it goes down to the lowest again in the next cycle.

These cycles are found to correspond with the periods of maximum sun-spots, which are doubtless due to the remarkable changes in the sun's photosphere causing abnormal rainfall on the earth. Just now, and for a few years back, the lake has been rising from the lowest point ever known. It is about eight feet above the lowest, and will have to rise eight feet more before it will reach the height of the year 1899. It is quite probable that the lake will rise several feet more before it begins its down march again.

That it will never be as low again as it has been is probable from the fact that the government is bringing in water from without the basin for irrigation purposes, and the water will all settle in the lake and tend to make it rise.

Some serious difficulties are arising to two railroads that cross the lake from the fact that the builders of these roads would not listen to the advice of the men of science who knew the past history of its waters. They built the roadbeds improperly and many feet too near the water, and consequently they are being swamped and washed out by storms. There need have been no trouble, for a stable road can be built across the lake anywhere.

The waters of the lake are very heavy and roll with a lazy motion, but with tremendous force. A person can lie flat on his back in the water, and a third of his body will still be above the surface; he floats like a cork, the only difficulty being that as his head is heavier than the rest, he is constantly trying to stand on it, which is not good for his breathing apparatus, since a single inhalation of the salty water will cause serious, although rarely fatal, inflammation of the lungs.

The water is full of animal life, even when it is at saturation; but the life is confined to a little shrimp about a forth of an inch long, and a little worm, the larva of a fly which feeds on the shrimp, and a few species of alga, on which the shrimps feed. No other living thing exists in the water, but these are enough, for there are hundreds of shrimps in every bucket of water. Except when milky with shrimp eggs, the water is as clear as crystal.

Tree Planting Pointers.

The following communication was recently received by Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, Harrisburg, Pa.:

"In planting apple, peach, pear, plum and cherry trees, also grapes, this fall, would you advise using any fertilizers with them? If so, what kind, and how much per tree. Should the same be mixed with the earth near the roots or should it be placed near the surface?"

Professor Surface replied as follows."

"This depends entirely upon the nature of the soil. If the soil is very fertile, or even of the average fertility, you do not need to add fertilizer in planting young trees. However, if you are going to use fertilizer, it would be better to put it in the bottom of the holes where the trees are set, and put some good top earth over it, so that the roots will not come in contact with the fertilizer, and then place the roots, and put fresh earth on top of them.

"In this way fertilizer is below the roots instead of above them, and will tend to develop them downward. I do not wish my fertilizer applied too near the surface of the ground, and I am well satisfied after considerable study on the subject, that it is not necessary to apply much fertlizer to young trees if the soil has much fertility in it. They can be pushed along by cultivating and pruning. When they commence to bear, one must watch them to see that they do not exhaust the fertility of the soil, and must feed them accordingly. Of course, where pests are present on trees every means of stimulating them to outgrow the effect of insects becomes important, and fertilizing, cultivating and pruning are just as necessary to obtain the very best results as is spraying."

A Word About Taft's Secretary.

"The delicacy of the diplomat, the strategy of the statesman, the facility of the politician, the courge, keenness and common sense of all successful men of affairs, the patience of Job and herculean ability for work," says the Woman's Home Companion for November. "These qualities have been stated as the ordinary requirements for the office of secretary to the President of the United States. Mr. Norton, who a few months ago, took up the duties of this position, is believed to possess all the qualities set forth above. Mr. Norton has made a rather rapid ascent up the ladder of fame. He seems to have done this not only by his remarkable combination of gifts, but by his readiness to forego, in the public service, a large salary. He left a position that paid him fifty thousand dollars a year to become first assistant secretary of the treasury at a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars. He plunged into the details of the work at the White House with such vim that neither he nor any one else noticed until the end of the first day that he had neglected to take the oath of office. One morning later, at Beverly, he refused to let the President have his letters because the latter was on a vacation and could not be allowed to do any work until he had ten days of recreation. Norton is tall, slender, active, cordial, well poised, self-reliant and clean mentally and morally. He is in his fortieth year."

New Railroad Requirment.

Beginning with January 1, next, all the bumpers and couplers on freight cars throughout the country will have to be located in exactly the same place. This order, emanating from the interstate commerce commission, is being hailed with delight by all railroad employes.

Owing to accidents, in many instance fatal, happening to the trainmen, agitation was started some time ago looking for a uniform system by which the couplers and the bumpers would be standardized. At first there was opposition to the plan on the part of the railroads, but so strong were the representations made and the testimony submitted that the inter-state commerce commission was impressed with the appeal and it was unanimously enacted.

The commission, acting on a recent federal law providing for uniform safety appliances, has issued an initial order. This requires drawbars that is, couplers and bumpers, to be located at a specific place on a car so that the cars of different railway companies can be coupled together, thus avoiding wrecks, and in many cases fatal accidents.

Mock Angel Food.

"This recipe requires the whites of only two eggs but it will make cake that will melt in your mouth," says the Woman's Home Companion for November. "You can not fail if you follow directions carefully. Set one cupful of milk into a dipper of boiling water and heat to boiling-point. Into a sifter, put one cupful of flour (no more), one cupful of sugar, three teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, pinch of salt; sift together four times; into this pour the cupful of boiling milk and stir smooth. Then put in the well-beaten whites of two eggs. Do not stir or beat eggs into mixture. Fold them in carefully, drawing the spoon through mixture toward you, then shoving it back with the back of the spoon; next draw the spoon from right to left and shove mixture back with back of spoon. Repeat this until the whites are evenly folded into batter. Do not grease tin, nor flavor cake. Bake in moderate oven. Ice with XXXX sugar flavored with lemon or orange."

SHOT WHITE DEER

Grant Hoover, Formerly of Bellefonte, Lands Rare Prize.

The Williamsport "Sun", on Saturday last, published the following account of the shooting of a white deer in Lycoming County by Grant Hoover, formerly of Bellefonte, and who now is engaged in the insurance business in Williamsport:

"An almost snow-white, ten-prong buck weighing 250 pounds arrived from the headquarters of the Larry's Creek Fish and Game club at Pine Street station over the New York Central railroad, this afternoon. The deer was shot on the Larry's Creek club preserve by Grant Hoover, of this city yesterday. The animal is so near white that before it was killed it looked as white as a snow drift. There are a few dark hairs scattered throughout its coat.

"Information that came in in advance of the carcass of the buck has it that Mr. Hoover shot the deer at a distance of 200 yards and that the animal dropped at the third shot. The first shot was fired when the deer was going through the woods like an express. The second shot is said to have penetrated the heart having entered the deer's body from the rump and ranged forward. According to some stories of the kill the buck did not fall then and the third shot was fired under the impression that the second shot had not taken effect.

"The deer was killed about one-fourth of a mile from the club house. Pure white, or almost pure white deer are not common in this part of the world. Naturalists say that such specimens as have been seen are albinos, that is common deer that have freaked as to color. None of the club men who have returned from the Larry's creek preserve to the city have any idea as to where the buck came from. Nobody saw it until Mr. Hoover's gun began to bark.

"The deer's horns are unusually splendid. There are five prongs to the horn and in perfect condition. How this big white buck with his launching antlers could have escaped the hunters of other seasons is puzzling the Larry's Creek club men. Some of them think the animal traveled from some other region and was still on its travels when it was surprised by the hunters.

"When E. B. Linck, the Fourth street furniture man, heard of the albino buck shot by Grant Hoover he said that while hunting near the preserve about three years ago he saw a small albino deer in an old orchard in the mountains, but did not take a shot at it for the reason that the horns were so short that he was afraid to run the risk of shooting the animal. He was wondering whether the buck killed by Mr. Hoover might not be the same animal grown to maturity."

This Question Should Be Answered Easily by Bellefonte People.

Which is wiser—to have confidence in the opinions of your fellow-citizens, of people you know, or depend on statements made by utter strangers residing in far-away places? Read the following:

Mrs. C. Johnson, 365 E. Bishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "I cannot say too much in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills, for they are the best remedy I ever used for backache and other symptoms of kidney trouble. At one time my back was so lame and painful that I could hardly get around and dizzy spells were common. I was restless at night and my kidneys gave me great annoyance, the kidney secretions being unnatural. On the advice of a member of my family who had used Doan's Kidney Pills with benefit, I procured a box at Green's Pharmacy Co, and they did me more good than any other medicine I had previously tried. The kidney secretions became natural and the pain and lameness in my back was removed. I heartily recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone afflicted with kidney complaint." (Statement given Oct. 21, 1907.)

Permanent Relief. On Nov. 23, 1909 Mrs. Johnson was interviewed and she said: "I still have unlimited confidence in Doan's Kidney Pills. They permanently cured me of kidney trouble and I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past two years. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and benefit has always been received."

CLEANSING MILK VESSELS.

After a Thorough Washing They Should Be Set In Sunshine.

When washing milk pails, pans, cans, churns, etc., first wash them out with cold or cool water, is the advice of a well known dairyman. It is much better if you wash them twice with cold water. Next wash in water as hot as the hands can bear in which there is soap or salsoda. Scald in boiling water and wipe with clean towels. Milk vessels in which milk remains for any length of time should be set in the sunshine to air. All milk vessels containing seams can be more thoroughly washed with a brush.

The separator parts should be washed and scalded and sunned the same a sthe milk pails. A sunny kitchen window is the best place to sun and air them. When washing milk vessels all rust should be removed from tinware vessels, as rust affords the very best of hiding places for germs. The outside of milk pails and cream cans should be kept as clean as the inside. The exterior of the separator should also be washed off after each using. Leave apart until the next milking time.

The churn should be washed and scalded. Keep the outside clean. Wash the strainer with a brush, using cold water first, then hot water. If by neglect the meshes of the strainer become closed you may readily clean it with dry salt and a stiff brush. If you use a strainer cloth first rinse in two cold waters, then wash in hot water and soap. Rinse in cold water and hang on the line to dry.

If the straining is attended to late in the evening, for the sake of convenience the strainer cloth may be hung on bars or on a line in the house. Cloths and towels used for washing milk vessels should be white and sweet, never sour and soiled. When there are quite a number of milk vessels to be washed the cloths and towels should not be used for any other purpose.

The Type For Good Breeders.

Straight, strong legs are a necessity under breeding sheep, and the pasterns must be strong, and, although this is more important with rams, it affects ewes to the extent that they may drop rams for breeding purposes. When the sheep has been examined for mutton form, constitution, legs and feet the fleece should be carefully looked through.

Market Pigs When "Ripe."

As soon as the pigs are in marketable condition—"ripe," as the butchers say—let them go. It does not pay to feed the animal after it is fit.

A Good Pasture Valuable.

Good clover pasture, pure water to drink and all the corn they will eat clean two or three times a day will prepare them quickly and economically for market.

Why Swine Become Stunted.

Many farmers neglect their swine in the hurry of summer work, and the result is the hogs become stunted. In the fall they have not made adequate growth, and, besides, stunted swine do not finish well.

The Long Silence.

"Yes, we are pretty comfortably fixed here," admitted a veteran employee in the reading room of the Congressional library when a visitor envied him his soft berth and comfortable surroundings. "But there's one thing we long for—yes, thirst for with a burning thirst. That's noise—a real, nerve racking, ear splitting noise. The long hours of soft silence, the dead stillness of everything about, grows so oppressive that at times we could shriek out. We get into a sort of sick-room tiptoe and a low tone of voice that finally degenerates into a whisper even at the telephone. Give us an occasional battery of artillery or a roaring lion or a steam calliope. Even a squalling baby would help some."—Washington Star.

LONE WOMAN IN PARIS

Places She May Visit Without Danger of Unpleasant Experiences.

Every year thousands of American women arrive in Paris unattended by men, while the English woman of today also dispenses with masculine escort and makes her way to foreign parts by herself, says an exchange. The woman alone has in fact become such a feature of modern Paris life that she now has a book written for her special benefit.

It is called "The Woman's Guide to Paris" and gives her a lot of useful information as to where she may go by herself without exciting comment, and names places from which she had better stay away. Miss Imvay, the writer of this little volume, went about to various restaurants and got a candid opinion from the managers as to whether women alone would cause any stir among the regular guests. It seems there are many restaurants and cafes where the unchaperoned woman is as safe from criticism as in her own home, but of the brasseries and taverns of Paris Miss Imvay will only recommend three to the attention of the unattended women.

In regard to smoking, French women of any social standing never smoke in public, so the guide advises abstention from this pleasure except in a woman's own room.

The unchaperoned woman is a familiar sight in Paris theaters, and those who follow Miss Imvay's instructions may go to as many theaters as they like, but their mentor urges them not to wear the ordinary tourist costume of short skirt and flannel blouse to the opera or the vaudeville and then mingle with the fashionably dressed audiences in the foyers.

The music hall is not forbidden to the woman alone, but she is warned that the best place for her is the balcony and she is advised to dress quietly. Parisian women do not go unattended to the open air music halls under the trees of Champs Elysees, but women travelers may permit themselves greater latitude. The cabarets on the other hand are best avoided when a woman is without male escort. This does not apply to the celebrated French balls. To two of these in particular, the Bal Tabarin and the Bal Bullier, Miss Imvay considers two women could go without male escort quite comfortably.

No woman need hesitate to go to any of the race courses in the Paris area if she is all by herself. She will not find herself an object of curiosity or of unwelcome attentions, while on the other hand if she needs information or advice she may rely on finding it, and it will be given with amiable courtesy and completeness.

Of course Miss Imbay devotes much space to shopping. She says English and American women are often disappointed in the Paris shops. The reason is not far to seek. Only a second or third rate modiste would dream of exposing her wares in the window, and through the interiors of the shops contain hundreds of dainty garments the window display to English and American eyes is unattractive in the extreme.

"A very short visit to Paris will convince any woman that prices here are higher than anywhere else in everything concerning woman's dress except in the matter of the ready made articles," continues Miss Imbay, and she tells her readers where the smartest and most tasteful articles de confection may be bought, where the best gloves are to be found and the choicest bargains in hats.

"At most milliners you are expected to do a little bargaining," she explains. "When offered a hat for 150 francs you will be quite safe in proposing 100 francs. and so on in proportion," This does not apply to the great stores, where the prices are fixed.

"Suffered day and night the torment of itching piles. Nothing helped me until I used Doan's Ointment. It cured me permanently."—Hon. John R. Garrett, Girard, Ala.

St. Bernard Dogs.

Among American tourists in Switzerland there is much rivalry for securing "real" St. Bernards to take home with them. They evidently do not know that the St. Bernards are mongrels. The original St. Bernards saw the light toward the end of the fourteenth century. The mother was a Wallis shepherd dog, the sire a mongrel of a Great Dane and a Spanish mountain mastiff.

In the winter of 1812 nearly all the doffs lost their lives in the snow. In 1816 the last St. Bernard dog died. But a monk of Martingny had a mongrel St. Bernard, and this was crossed with Wallis sheep dogs. The breeding being done in scientific manner, the present race of St. Bernard through mongrel, like the first, is better and stronger than the old one, it is said.

The railways have made use of St. Bernards almost unnecessary now, yet they continue on the old stand in winter when the snow lies high. Only the male dogs are used for rescuing men in distress. They are followed by men on snowshoes, who carry provisions. Each of the older dogs has one or more young companions, which he teaches the business.—Boston Post.

Pantry Points.

"The glassware should go into the hot suds first and be taken out and dried before any greasy dishes go in. The silver should come next and the large pieces last." says Christine Terhune Herrick in Woman's Home Companion for November.

"Keep polishing-powder, paste or soap at hand, and if a piece of silver is dulled or tarnished or stained, give it a rub to restore its freshness. If silver is properly washed whenever it is used, it will never be dingy enough to require that a special day shall be devoted to its cleaning. A piece of chamois will polish it quickly.

"A little ammonia added to the water in which you are washing silver and glass will brighten it, and ammonia is invaluable in removing grease from dishes.

"To keep silver bright when not in use, lay a piece of gum camphor in the drawer or box in which the silver is kept."

SHAKESPEARE'S POISONS.

They Are Taken Too Seriously by Some Modern Chemists.

It is one of the penalties of Shakespeare's position as a great poet that his words are taken seriously

A learned doctor in a foreign scientific review has been molding an inquisition into the poisons mentioned by him. He points out that the "juice of cursed hebenon," which Claudius is said to have poured into the ear of Hamlet's father, is incapable of piercing the tympanum of the ear and therefore could not have penetrated the body and poisoned the blood, as the ghost alleges. Again, the narcotic which Friar Laurence administers to Juliet was probably either Datura stramonium or mandragora root. The first is used by the convicts in New Caledonia when they wish to rob their companions, but its effects do not last forty-two hours nor anything like that time. A scientist who experimented on himself with mandragora found that intense sickness is caused on waking, and this did not happen to Juliet. As for the poison which was given to Romeo, it was probably aconite or one of those mixed poisons composed of vegetable alkaloids and ptomaine, since it was so remarkably rapid in its effects.

But that is the fault of too serious people. They will take everything seriously. Shakespeare probably knew nothing at all of poisons or of narcotics. He was a poet and not a chemist and might therefore be allowed the usual poetic license.—London Globe.

TWIN EARTHQUAKES.

Two Distinct Series of Shocks Are Felt Almost Simultaneously.

Among the most interesting earth tremors from a scientific point of view are those known as "twin earthquakes," where two distinct series of shocks are felt, separated by an interval of two or three seconds. In each series the vibrations increase to a maximum and die away, the whole duration, including the quiet interval, being eight to twelve seconds. In some parts of the earthquake zone the most powerful shocks are nearly always of this kind. When they occur, however, there is always a strip of country where only one shock is felt.

Apparently there are two distinct points of origin for these shocks, and the strip where a single shock is felt is that where the two sets of vibrations arrive simultaneously. The fact that this band is straight shows that the twin shocks occur together and that therefore one is not a consequence of the other. Probably there is an S shaped bend in some interior layer of rock and the twin foci are at the points of greatest displacement—namely, the bends of the S. The movement that causes such a twin earthquake therefore results in accentuating the form of the fold in the earth's crust.—New York Herald.

The Fighting Maoris.

Some 300 Maoris were shut up in trenchments at a place called Orakaw Without food except a few raw potatoes, without water, pounded at by artillery and under a hail of rifle bullets and hand grenades, unsuccessfully assaulted no less than five times, they held out for three days, completely surrounded. General Cameron humanely sent a flag of truce, inviting them to surrender honorably. To this they made the ever famous reply: "Enough! We fight right on forever!" Then the general offered to let the women come out, and the answer was, "The women will fight as we." At length on the afternoon of the third day the garrison in a body charged at quick march right through the English lines, fairly jumping over the heads of the men of the Fortieth regiment as they lay behind a bank. Half of them fell; the remainder got clear away. The earthworks and the victory remained with us, but the glory was theirs."—"The Long White Cloud," by W. P. Reeves.

Forgot Himself.

Absentminded persons are not infrequently met among the medical profession, who of all men should always have their wits about them. It is related that a well known doctor was once present in a public place when an accident occurred and, seeing a wounded man, went about calling: "A doctor! A doctor! Somebody go and fetch a doctor!"

A friend who was by his side ventured to inquire, "Well, what about yourself?"

"Oh, dear," answered the doctor, suddenly recalling the fact that he belonged to the medical profession, "I didn't think of that!"

To Ferment.

"You know, Elsie, that 'ferment' means 'to work,'" said the teacher. "Now you may write a sentence on the blackboard containing the word 'ferment.'"

After a moment's thought Elsie wrote as follows: "In summer I love to ferment among the flowers in our garden."—Chicago News.

Should be Re-elected.

United States Senator George T. Oliver, of Pittsburg, has announced his candidacy for election to a full term of six years at Washington. The Legislature, which convenes in January, next, will elect Senator Oliver's successor.

It is in keeping with Senator Oliver's open, frank way of doing things that he publicly announces his candidacy and invites the support of Republicans in a Republican caucus of Senators and Representatives, which will be held in Harrisburg shortly after the Legislature convenes. He properly announces that he desires re-election, that he concedes it to be a matter for a majority of the Legislature to decide and that whatever the result he will cheerfully abide thereby.

Senator Oliver now is serving out the unexpired term of P. C. Knox, who retired to enter the cabinet of President Taft. During the comparatively few months he has been at Washington Senator Oliver has demonstrated that he is the right man in the right place. First of all, Senator Oliver is a business man. He has had wide experience with and thoroughly knows the needs of the great business interests of Pittsburg and all western Pennsylvania. The information he was able to give, at first hand, was invaluable during the period of the tariff discussion at Washington. Of all the members of the Senate, he was one of the very few able to tell, from personal knowledge, just how certain proposed changes would affect items under consideration. To his wide knowledge of the needs of western Pennsylvania more so than to anything else is due the splendid care afforded those interests in the preparation of the tariff law.

Possessing more modesty than many others in public life, Senator Oliver has never indulged in self exploitation. His personal worth, best known and understood by those who have come into contact with him, both in public and private life, is an asset of which any man might well be proud. Clean, upright, honest to a degree that to some is irksome, Senator Oliver is the type of man in whose hands the interests of the people may safely be entrusted. His word is his bond. His standard is open and above-board dealing between man and man, whether it be a matter of politics or a business transaction. He will not stoop to the dishonorable, even though so to do might tend to personal profit or advancement.

It has been the privilege of the editor of "The Republican" to enjoy the personal acquaintance and know the friendship of Senator Oliver during a period of a number of years. We have never known him to be accused with having done anything but what was strictly in keeping with a Christian man. We have had ample opportunity to observe him, in business life and in public affairs, and never during this time have we known him to be identified with a single act but what was to his credit. He is a gentleman, something that may not truthfully be said of all men in public life. He is always accessible and open to argument. He is one of the few men who after being chosen to high office do not forget that after all they have been chosen to represent the people who elected them. There are some men who find pleasure in helping others, especially those less fortunate. Senator Oliver is of this class. There are few men in Pennsylvania today who have done so much toward easing the burdens of others as has Senator Oliver, and yet, because of his modesty his liberal benefactions are known only to the recipients.

We venture the statement that every citizen of Bellefonte and other sections of Centre County who met Senator Oliver on the occasion of his visit here about one year ago was deeply impressed with the man. Those who expected to find him an average type politician were most agreeably surprised to meet a clean-cut, broad-minded, experienced business man. Although this was his first visit, on a few minutes walk about town he displayed a remarkable knowledge of quite a few of our home people and their ancestors. Although here but a short time, he seemed to take pleasure in inquiring into the business side of the community, its resources, etc. We recall a remark he made on returning from a little walk about town. It was in effect that while he had spent his lifetime in a large and busy city, it was a long cherished hope that his latter years might be spent in just such a pretty town as Bellefonte.

It is because we know and have the fullest confidence in Senator Oliver that we frankly and earnestly urge his re-election. To have at Washington a man of his type means much to the people of the smaller communities in the State. Pennsylvania will be honored by returning Mr. Oliver to Washington for a full term of six years.

DR. PLATTS RESIGNS

Presbyterian Minister Goes to Second Church, Wilkinsburg.

Rev. Dr. J. Allison Platts on Sunday, last, tendered his resignation as pastor of the Bellefonte Presbyterian church and about December 1, next, will go to Wilkinsburg, near Pittsburg, where he has accepted the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian church. Dr. Platts' salary in Bellefonte has been $2500, but with January 1, next, it was to have been reduced to $2000. His salary in Wilkinsburg will be $3000 from the start, with the prospect of an increase to $4000 and possibly $4500.

Anticipating that he might have something to say in regard to his decision to resign his pastorate here, an unusually large congregation was in attendance at the Presbyterian church on Sunday morning. To the surprise of all, however, Dr. Platts was not present. He had arranged with Rev. Fred W. Barry, pastor of the Lutheran church, for an exchange of pulpits for the Sunday morning service.

At the conclusion of Mr. Barry's sermon, Dr. Platts' letter of resignation was read and announcement made that it would be formally submitted to a congregational meeting to be held on Wednesday evening, November 30. This is, however, a mere matter of form, it being understood that Dr. Platts' wish that he be relieved of the local pastorate will be respected and his resignation accordingly accepted.

By officers of the church it was yesterday said that no one is in view as Dr. Platts' successor. Until a permanent selection is made the Presbyterian pulpit will be filled by a minister temporarily employed or by supply ministers.

MEETING OF GRANGE

Fourth Quarterly Gathering to be Held at Centre Hall, Dec. 2.

The fourth quarterly meeting of the Centre County Pomona Grange will be held in Grange Arcaia, at Centre Hall, on Friday, December 2. There will be two sessions; one at 10 A. M., and the other at 1.30 P. M.

All Fourth and Fifth degree members are cordially invited. The Fifth degree will be conferred at the afternoon session, so as to prepare members to receive the Sixth degree at the annual meeting of the State Grange, at Butler, during the week of December 18.

In order that the members of the order may not be at unnecessary expense to attend the meeting, it has been arranged that Progress Grange provide tables, dishes and coffee, and the members of the Order bringing a lunch with them will thus be afforded an opportunity to have a nice dinner and a social hour. Ample stabling for teams on the Grange camp ground.

The invitations to the meeting are signed by Willard Dale, master, and D. M. Campbell, secretary.

Beat Them All.

Once more "The Republican" has demonstrated that it is the one newspaper in Centre County that gets the news and gives it to its readers. On Tuesday morning "The Republican" scored a triumph in newspaper enterprise, securing and exclusively publishing Bert Delige's confession that he had murdered Mrs. John Baudis, at Scotia. Delige's confession was secured from him on Monday night and at 5.30 o'clock, on Tuesday morning, an extra edition was delivered at the Bellefonte post office. Without so much as an inkling of the confession known to the public, a special edition of "The Republican" was delivered at 7 o'clock in the morning to each of our regular readers. Not until "The Republican" appeared on the street did the other local newspapers and the public in general know of the confession. Regular readers of "The Republican" were the first and only persons in Bellefonte and throughout Centre County to get the news, all of which was furnished absolutely free of charge.

From the day of the tragic murder of Mrs. Baudis down to the exclusive announcement in "The Republican" that Delige had confessed, this newspaper has led all others in securing and publishing the news. We published an exclusive extra edition telling of the murder on the morning following the crime. In our regular edition that week we published the most complete report of the tragedy of any newspaper, presenting a detailed account of the murder and displaying it with splendid photographs of the principals and one of Delige's tell-tale foot prints in the mud dam at Scotia. At the time of Delige's hearing each of our readers received a copy of "The Republican" containing a complete report. When Delige's missing razor was found we again published an exclusive extra edition. When it came to the point that Delige confessed, "The Republican" was on the job, got the news and printed it.

We appreciate the many compliments we have received on our enterprise but in this connection we wish to say that we merely followed our announced policy that nothing is too good for readers of "The Republican" and that it is always a pleasure to us to exert ourselves to give them the best. Incidentally, we might remark that results demonstrate that it pays to read "The Republican," the subscription rate of which is $1 a year in advance.

Events Recalled By Quaint Old Papers

We have come into possession of an especially interesting old document, the contents of which we shall share with readers of "The Republican." It is an autobiography of General Samuel Miles, founder of the pretty town of Milesburg and great-grandfather of our fellow-townsman F. Potts Green.

The narrative, written in the hand of General Miles, is quite lengthy but it is so full of the spirit and life of more than one hundred years ago and tells so much about his activities, never before published, that we shall print the article in full, presenting it in probably two installments. Before publishing the autobiography, however, we shall endeavor to tell something of the personal side of General Miles.

Strange indeed, it does seem, in reviewing his exciting life as a soldier, that Samuel Miles was born during the most peaceful period of our colonial history and, during the first year of his life, the renowned preacher, Whitfield, was holding his great revivals. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm near Philadelphia, acquired, in his own phrase, "a common country education," and learned to use his hands in honest labor.

During the first sixteen years of his life the development of the province continued undisturbed, but in 1755 the French and Indian War broke out, which finally resulted in the conquest of Canada by the English. Braddock's defeat at Pittsburg was the signal for many atrocities committed upon the frontier towns along the Susquehanna, and several companies of militia were immediately raised for the common defense. Young Miles was among the first to volunteer and was continually in the field until the war was ended in 1760, when he was finally discharged with a well earned Captain's commission. His narrative speaks of marches from one end of the state to the other, through unbroken wilderness to Franklin, to Lake Erie, to Pittsburg, and back to Philadelphia. He tells of mutinies, of skirmishes, and of winter marches for hundreds of miles under conditions which no army would attempt at this day.

In 1761 he married and engaged in business in Philadelphia, and for several years gave his whole attention to peaceful enterprises. Samuel Miles early became a man of prominence in Philadelphia, was elected to several city and county offices, and gradually acquired both influence and wealth.

In the meantime the Stamp Act and other similar Parliamentary measures aroused the colonies to such a point of hostility to the crown that committees of safety were chosen in each province, and in 1774 deputies were selected to a general conference, which became the first Continental Congress. One of the protesting citizens from Pennsylvania, who assembled at Philadelphia to select the members of the proposed congress from this colony, was Samuel Miles. He took a prominent part in the assemblage and, though not chosen as one of the seven delegates, was immediately appointed on all the committees of the Province.

His narrative gives a stirring account of what was done by the Pennsylvania troops in the early days of the war, up to the battle of Long Island, where he was made a prisoner by the British army. The early historians of the Revolution suggest that the conduct of the Pennsylvania troops was not of the best and that their officers were of little value. This theory of the battle of Long Island has been completely abandoned by the later historians, and Colonel Miles' view of the fight and his plan of action, especially regarding the defense of the Jamaica road, is now completely vindicated. His account of this fight is well worth reading and is of great historical interest. The Pennsylvania authorities at least approved the action of their commanding colonel, for he was created a Brigadier-General in December 1776, during his imprisonment by the British.

It is much to be regretted that General Miles did not see fit to leave us some account of his life in prison. For part of the time at least he was confined in one of the infamous floating prisons in New York Bay, but later was given his parole by General Howe to negotiate an exchange of prisoners. This was not accomplished until in April, 1778, after the alliance with the French had been concluded, when he was finally released.

By this time the war had developed so many good men fitted for command that no place of actual service was found for the newly appointed General, in consequence of which he retired to his home to recuperate from the fatigues of his imprisonment for the following year.

However, General Miles' talents were not to lie idle. The Assembly appointed him Auditor of the army accounts, and later he was appointed Quartermaster of the State, Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals, and a member of the important Council of Censors. As in the present day, a high office did not carry with it immunity from censure, and General Miles was charged with misappropriation of public moneys. His trial, resulting in his complete acquittal, did not satisfy him. He demanded that his defamer be deprived of his offices and, as the Assembly adjourned without complying with his request, he resigned all his positions, and for a year or two retired to private life. About 1774 General Miles began to be interested in the iron business and, in connection with General John Patton and others, became the owner of Centre Furnace and the Milesburg Iron Works, two of the first iron furnaces in this county.

In 1788 General Miles was elected to the Executive Council, in the following year an Alderman of the City, and in 1790 was chosen as the first Mayor of Philadelphia under its new charter. He retired at the end of his first year of service to devote his energies to his largely increasing business affairs. The firm of Miles, Patton and Miles took a foremost place in the rapidly developing iron industry. From their headquarters at Centre Furnace they branched out over the county. One of their principal acts was the starting of the furnace at Milesburg and the establishment of the town named for the General. He took much interest in his Centre County business affairs, as is shown by his numerous letters to foreign residents of this community, and considered the Milesburg plant as his special pride. Much as these business projects meant to him in a financial way, his autobiography does not endeavor to touch upon them. Having the fullest regard for his position as one of the upper classes, which can easily be inferred from his narrative, he considers business entirely beneath such a recital and confines the remainder of his paper to an account of his public actions.

Elected as a presidential elector on the Federalist ticket in 1796, he disregarded his instructions and voted for the Democratic candidate, giving as his principal reason the fact that Adams' election would probably mean war with France, and that Jefferson was likely to make better terms with the French government. Such action at the present day would be likely to terminate a political career, but the community must have respected his reasons for he was appointed the Justice of the Peace for Montgomery County, where he then resided, and later was elected a member of the Assembly. Falling ill during a session of this body held at Lancaster, he was taken to his home at Cheltenham where he expired on the 29th day of December 1805, at the comparatively early age of sixty six.

Next week we shall publish the first installment of the narrative written by General Miles, kindly furnished us by his descendent, F. P. Green.

JACOB WEBER DEAD

Passes Away at His Home at State College on Monday.

Jacob Weber, a well known resident of State College, died on Monday night, at 10 o'clock, at his late home at that place. Funeral services were held today, at 10 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Samuel Martin, his pastor.

Deceased was a son of Jacob and Catherine Weber, early settlers at Boalsburg. In May, 1885, he was married to a daughter of the late Judge Riley, of Boalsburg. He was a musician of no little talent and was an active member of the Presbyterian church. Surviving are a widow and seven children, and also the following brothers and sisters: John, of Centre Hall; Peter, of Huntingdon; Mrs. Henry Meyer and Samuel, Frederich and Anna, all of Boalsburg.

George Krider Dead.

George Krider, a former resident of Centre County, died, on Friday last, at the home of his son-in-law, John S. Flack, in Sinking Valley, aged almost 79 years. Deceased was born in Half Moon township, February 20, 1831. He was married, October 3, 1854, to Miss Margaret Eleanor Braden, at Pine Grove Mills, and for the next few years resided on a farm near Gatesburg, later moving to Huntingdon Furnace and from there to Graysville. In 1882 he removed to Sinking Valley, where he remained until 1893, when he located in Fairview. His wife died about five months ago. Surviving are the following children: Mrs. Andrew Geist, of Frankstown; John B. and George H., of Altoona; J. Edward, Miss Emma B., and Mrs. J. S. Fleck, of Sinking Valley. He is also survived by three brothers, and two sisters, namely, Rev. Samuel Krider, of Johnstown; Rev. Isaac Krider, of Duncansville, and Jacob Krider of Gatesburg; Mrs. Catherine Strayer, of Hollidaysburg, and Mrs. John Strayer, of Gatesburg.

Married on Sunday.

Alfred W. Lyle, of Houserville, and Miss Mary J. Ulrich, of Spring Mills, were married at noon, on Sunday, last, at the home of Mr. and Mrs John Eckles, on Lamb Street. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. W. Winey, pastor of the United Brethren church.

Dropped Dead at Furnace.

Michael Barber, a foreigner employed by the Bellefonte Furnace Company, dropped dead while at work on Saturday night, last. The man was about 38 years of age and had been in this community for probably 18 years.

Butter Scoring Awards.

The last regular scoring contest of the year held under the auspices of the Department of Dairy Husbandry of the Pennsylvania State College, was a complete success. More entries were made this year than ever before. By having only four contests this year more were able to take part. The difficulty has been that some of the creameries have been closed during the winter and not being able to participate during the entire year, did not enter at all. The four contests plan, therefore, will be continued next year. The butter was scored by Robert McAdam, Federal butter inspector, New York City. Charles Dodge, Little Cooly, Pa., received the highest score for the month, 94. R. E. Williams, Brandywine Summitt; O. D. Mott, Edinburg, and Fred W. Reynolds, Mainsburg, tied for second place, each receiving a score of 93½.

The butter entered this month averaged good. Many of the samples, however, were criticised for having a weedy flavor. This was no doubt due to the cattle being turned into stubble fields and in weedy wood lots. The workmanship of the butter was good. A few samples, however, were mottled. The department is of the opinion that more attention should be given to the temperatures and amount of working.

The Very Latest in Muffs.

"The new muffs are large and some are fancy in style," says Grace Margaret Gould in Woman's Home Companion for November. "They are combined with considerable chiffon, velvet and silk. In fact, quite a number of the smartest sets have the long stole and muff made of plaited chiffon trimmed with fur bands. It is an excellent way to make over old fur into modish neckscarfs and muffs.

"Furs are manipulated this season much as a fabric would be. Where fur scarfs are not combined with fabrics they are quite plain. In shape they are very long and wide, carrying out the vogue for the long, flat scarf which had its origin in the satin affairs seen at the French races last summer. Some of the new muffs are fancy in shape, but only when combined with chiffon, satin or velvet.

When it comes to getting out a newspaper "The Republican" has them all beaten to a frazzle. Just fourteen hours after the murder of Mrs. John Baudis they had the news up here in a special edition. Three hours after Delige's hearing "The Republican" was here again. The first we knew of the finding of Delige's razor was when it was told in the special edition of "The Republican." Eleven hours after Delige made his confession we received the news here in another special edition of "The Republican." This shows what a man can do who is up-to-date, but when the mail reaches here with "The Republican" one can see that we appreciate what he is doing for us.

The latest from the Scotia deer hunters in the Alleghenies is that they have no deer, but that they almost had a dead man on the second morning in camp. Capt. Cronemiller placed his men on crossings and with two other men started to drive out the deer. They routed out a fine big buck. When it came to where Judd Williams was standing, Judd had a bad case of "Buck ague." The deer stood and calmly looked at him for a few minutes and then slowly started down the mountain. After Judd had come to he said his gun missed fire, of course. The deer never knew he was the cause of almost sending Judd to the "happy hunting ground."

Milton Peters, who has been confined to his room for over a week with grip, is slowly improving.

Don. McEwen, Ralp Holt and Mont. Musser, three young men formerly of this place, started to walk to Snow Shoe on Tuesday morning, last, at 8 o'clock, over the Allegheny mountains. They thought they would take a near cut between the brick house and the Snow Shoe road, but got on the wrong path and wandered down to the head of Wallace Run, where they roamed around in the dense mountains for about two hours. Finally they came upon some hunters who directed them to the right road. They landed in Snow Shoe about 3.30 in the afternoon, footsore and weary. Don. says it is nearer thirty miles than fifteen. They had intended hunting on the return trip, but Mont. said that passenger train looked too good to him. They returned home on Wednesday, and after a few days' rest were again able to walk.

Judging by the Looks.

Little Margaret has the usual inquiring mind of youth. Recently her Great-Aunt Charlotte was visiting the family and Margaret boldly asked the lady's age.

"How old do you think I am?" returned the aunt.

The little girl gazed at her earnestly for a moment and then said:

"Well, I don't know, Aunt Charlotte, but you don't look new!"—Woman's Home Companion.

COUNTING BY TENS.

And a Suggestion as to Why We Buy Things by the Dozen.

Did it ever occur to you as strange that while we count by tens we buy so many articles by the dozen? If we ask the price of apples, oranges, oysters, eggs, collars, handkerchiefs and many other things we will be told so many cents or dollars a dozen, or if large quantities are wanted so much a gross, which means a dozen dozen.

How do you suppose this has come about? It was this way: Nearly all savage people count by their fingers—that is, if they want to tell you they have seen two wild beasts they will hold up two fingers, and if ten they will hold up both hands, and if twenty both hands twice, and so on. Babies also learn to count by their fingers and toes, and to many people it seems as if that were the only possible way.

It is, however, rather a clumsy way, as you find out when you try to divide ten. Say, for example, you have ten apples. You can only make an equal division among two or five persons, while if you have twelve you can give an equal number to two, three, four or six. We find the same inconvenience in dividing a dollar and often have to pay 13 cents for what should properly cost 12½ cents.

If we had been born with two, four six or eight fingers or toes, like some animals, it is possible that we should have counted differently, but it does not now seem likely there will ever be any change in the ten or decimal system, as it is called, especially since the Arabic numerals now used nearly everywhere are based on this system.—Brooklyn Eagle.

SPOILED THE PLOT.

A Display of Juvenile Affection That Saved the Mongrel.

About three weeks ago there strolled into a Ridley Park house a dirty, disreputable looking dog. He was of no particular breed, but a general mixture of all there are. Out of the kindness of her heart the cook gave him a few bites to eat, and from that time on, try as they would, the family could not get rid of the canine. The small children took a great fancy to the dog and named him Bluie. Their father and mother grew tired of seeing Bluie around and secretly plotted to get him out of the way. They feared to kidnap him openly by day, for there would surely follow much protest and distress on the part of the children. Accordingly plans were made for losing Bluie some place far from Ridley Park by night. The evening that the plot was to be carried out, just after supper, father, mother and a five-year-old boy were in the parlor. The little fellow was fondling the dog as if he were his best friend in the world. Finally he seized the dog firmly under the shoulders and, looking straight into his eyes, lisped out, "Bwoole, do you wove me?" and then after a moment with joy in his voice, "Bwoole woves me and the world is mine." After that touching display neither father nor mother had the heart to deprive the little fellow of "Bwoole's" company, and the little mongrel dog seems sure of a comfortable home for life.—Philadelphia Record.

How Japs Play Ken.

In its most widely practiced form the basis of the Japanese game of ken is that the fully outstretched hand signifies paper, the fully closed hand a stone, and two fingers alone extended, the rest being closed, scissors. Each of the players, counting one, two, three, throws out his hand at the moment of pronouncing three, and the one whose manual symbol is superior to that of the others, according to the theory of the game, wins the trial. Superiority is determined on the hypothesis that whereas scissors cannot cut a stone they can cut paper and whereas paper is cut by scissors it can wrap up a stone—consequently scissors are inferior to stone, but conquer paper; stone is inferior to paper, but conquers scissors, and paper is inferior to scissors, but conquers stone. There are innumerable varieties of the game.

SHOWS IN LONDON

Crowds That Gather to Secure Seats In the Pit.

A LONG WAIT FOR TICKETS.

The Line, Orderly and Well Dressed, Begins to Form as Early as 5 o'Clock In the Afternoon and In Case of a Popular Play Even Earlier.

In the better London theaters it costs 2s. 6d. to go into the pit, which, relatively speaking, is a good sum to pay, for a half dollar in New York isn't much better than a shilling in London when it comes to purchasing value.

The pit crowd begins to assemble as early as 5 o'clock in the afternoon and in cases of a great success even earlier than that. My first experience as a pittite occurred in London one summer night two years ago, when, after vain efforts to buy, borrow, beg or steal stalls for a popular play, writes Adolph Klauber in the Green Book, I finally decided to see it from the pit. When I arrived at the theater, about 5 o'clock one Saturday afternoon, I found there was already a long line of men and boys and women, the foremost with face glued to the pit door and the line extending far beyond the narrow passageway to the street in front of the theater. Now, with every desire in the world to send my New York constituency some news of this great reigning success and not without some curiosity of my own I was still far from willing to cool my heels for the best part of three hours until the doors should open.

I turned and found a newsboy at my elbow.

"I'll 'old your place for you, sir," he repeated. "What time 'll you be back?"

It was then that I discovered for the first time this London institution, the place holder at the door of the pit, one of the many means by which one of the struggling unemployed or of the poorly paid seeks to add a few shillings to his meager, frugal income. There was no risk involved. The boy was quick to note the foreigner.

"It'll be all roight, sir," he said in his cheerful cockney way. "Is the lady coming too? Me and me friend 'll stand in line, and all you'll have to do will be to change places with us when you come around tonight. Only a shillin' apiece. It's worth it, sir, not to have to wait."

At 7 o'clock we were back in the narrow court, but long before I had been able to disentangle my boy from the dozen or so others, all looking very much alike, his cheerful tones greeted me with "'Ere you are, sir, 'ere you are, and you and the lady 'll get in the first row if you look sharp when you pass the door."

"Gee-rusalem," I muttered as we dropped into the interstices left by the departing boys, "a good half hour to wait—or more."

But, after all, I found the waiting far from tedious.

Hawkers of fruit and chocolate passed along the line, finding ready buyers among the waiting patrons of the pit, and every few minutes some new vaudeville faker out of work would come along to entertain the crowd with tumbling, dancing, singing or imitations. First a juggler appeared, and when a bobby sent him spinning faster than his plates and balls a contortionist took his place, spread a ragged carpet mat and began to turn himself inside out while the newsboys and shop girls going home from work shouted encouragement and appreciation. Finally the bobby ordered him to "move on," but not until a generous shower of pennies had fallen on the mat. The next man to appear carried a valise from which he produced wigs, crimpled hair and several false noses. His entertainment consisted of imitations of composers, "famous," he called them, but "infamous" they really were. He was not encouraged, either, for the pit line knew good from bad and wasn't to be parted from its pennies without proper value in return.

The crowd was genial, orderly, well dressed, and when the doors were opened finally I expected a headlong rush. But there was not the slightest suggestion of a scramble—a little congestion naturally at the narrow entrance, where a smiling, good natured bobby remarked quite pleasantly:

"Now, then, go easy—just the same as you went into church last Sunday—if you did go."

Then a short passage up a flight of narrow stairs, past a little cubbyhole where the tickets are handed out after you have duly deposited your two-and-six, into the theater and ready for the play.

Nine Points In Law.

A three-year-old was being made ready for a bath, much to her discomfort, as she heartily disliked soap and water. "Don't dit water in my eyes," she said, "and don't dit soap in my nose."

Thinking to quiet her, her mother said, "Never mind, Dorothy; it's my nose, anyway."

"Well, I don't care," replied Dorothy, with feeling; "it's me that's using it."—Delineator.

His Revenge.

"You shouldn't have proposed to me," she said gently. "You might have known I'd refuse you."

"I did know," he said savagely, "or I wouldn't have proposed."—Baltimore American.

The essence of knowledge is, having it, to apply it; not having it, to confess your ignorance.—Confucius.

SOWING HIS WILD OATS.

Nights of Wasteful Debauchery That Wore Him Out.

"Yes, I'm dissipating too much," said the red faced rustic as he rubbed his head despondently.

"Dissipating?" gasped his friend.

"That's the word I used. You've heard that expression about 'burning life's candle at both ends?' Well, that's my case exactly. To tell the truth, I have been having too gay a time. Last night I went down to the Blue Moon and drank a soda. Then some traveling man offered me a cigar. Of course I had to take it."

"You don't mean it?"

"I mean just what I say. Then I bought a ham sandwich. I ate it and actually forgot myself and took another. On my way home I dropped into the church social for a few minutes. Some of the young ladies made me try the 'penny dip,' and I drew a blank."

"Such extravagance!"

"That's exactly it. Extravagance and dissipation will kill me. It was 9 o'clock before I reached home."

"Nine o'clock!"

"Yes. I must be sowing my wild oats. Well, I've finished now. Night before last I called on my girl. She wouldn't let me leave until I had taken her out and bought chocolate creams. Talk about pleasure hunting! I'm simply worn out after these nights of wasteful debauchery."—Pearson's Weekly.

BLINDING A SHARK.

A Pearl Diver's Ruse by Which He Made Good His Escape.

A successful diver must possess great courage and nerves of steel. Such a man connected with a large wrecking company was visiting some years ago the pearl fisheries in the gulf of California, where sharks abounded. On one of his trips in quest of the pearl oyster he had a narrow escape from a fearful death.

He had been instructed never to stir from the bottom until he had looked up and around. Fortunately he heeded the advice. Having filled his bag, he glanced quickly about and caught sight of a huge shovel nosed shark watching him.

In an emergency men think fast. Near the diver was a large rock. He moved quickly to the other side of it, hoping to dodge the ferocious monster, but the maneuver did not work. The shark watched every movement, changing his position by a slight motion of his powerful tail.

Time was precious, and the diver conceived the idea of blinding the shark by stirring up the mud. Under cover of that he might escape. He worked for dear life and had the water thick with mud in less than half a minute.

Slipping around the rock again, he rose to the surface, having barely strength enough to reach the side of the boat, and was hauled on board just as the voracious man eater made a rush for him.

Romeo Not Taken Seriously.

Juliet was only fifteen years old, but she thought she was quite grown up. One evening, says Mrs. R. A. Pryor in "My Day," she was receiving on the moonlit veranda a young man caller. He, too, it seemed, considered himself grown up. The anxious youth was moved to seize the propitious hour and declare himself. Juliet wished to answer correctly and dismiss him without wounding him.

She assured him mamma would never consent.

A voice from within—they were sitting beneath her mother's window—settled the matter:

"Accept the young man, Juliet, if you want to. I've not the least objection. And let him run along home now. Be sure to bolt the door when you come in."

Evidently the mother had small respect for boy lovers and wished to go to sleep.

A Prince Edward Island Legend.

There is a delightful legend among the people of Point Prim to the effect that when the English attacked the French fort at that place a chain ball from one of the attacking vessels cut the steeple from the old church located on the very point. In falling it toppled over the promontory and carried the bell which it contained into the sea. Dwellers along the point affirm that from time to time the sound of that bell comes over the waters at eventide and that its phantom tone is ever a warning of a fierce storm or some imminent danger to those who make their living by the spoils of the ocean.

The Rope and the Ring

How an Escaped Convict Accomplished a Heroic Deed.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The steamer Tecumseh was moving along at a ten knot gait off Norfolk, Va., when the lookout called:

"Boat ahead on the port bow."

With his glass the captain swept the quarter of the ocean indicated and saw a cockleshell skiff pulled by a single man. He was alone in the boat and beyond sight of land.

"Put her off three points to westward," said the captain to the helmsman.

The ship was steered in the direction of the man in the boat, and as it drew near him broad stripes revealed themselves on the garments he wore.

"Escaped jailbird!" exclaimed the captain in disgust at having to rescue such a man.

A rope was lowered, and the convict was pulled aboard. He walked aft to where the captain stood waiting for him and said:

"You see by my garb, captain, that I am an escaped prisoner. I broke away last night, made my way to the coast before morning, seized a boat and pulled out, where I hoped to be picked up by a passing ship. I must throw myself on your mercy not to put me back where I came from. If you intend doing so I beg you rather to toss me overboard, for I prefer to die rather than return to that horrible life."

"It wouldn't do for me," replied the captain, "to assist a prisoner regularly convicted under the law to obtain his freedom. You may work with the crew while you are on board my ship, but when we reach port I'll have to turn you over to the authorities."

There was a look of agony in the man's eyes as he turned away in company with the mate to take his place among the crew. He was young—not more than twenty-seven—vigorous and refined looking. He had eaten nothing since the day before. Food was given him; but, though he needed it, he had not the heart to eat more than he absolutely required.

Bad weather set in that night from the northeast, blowing a cold blast. The ship was riding obliquely across the waves which dashed up against her bows, now raising skyward and now pointing toward the bottom.

It was about midnight that, while the stern was raised high in the air, an enormous wave struck it with terrific force. There was a sharp report, and the helmsman found that the wheel turned without assistance. Something had happened to free the rudder and render it useless. The ship was at the mercy of the waves.

When the captain, who was on deck, learned of the trouble he blanched. He was not more than thirty miles from the Virginia coast, and with a northeast wind blowing his ship southwestward it would go ashore by daylight.

While this flashed into his mind the vessel was turning and in a few moments was rolling in the trough of the sea. Orders were issued to get up such sails as would be of service in steering. With the help of these, though the ship steadily lost ground, those aboard of her gained time. Morning came, and there was the shore like a faint cloud resting on the horizon, and with a powerful glass a white line could be seen breaking against it. Some steering gear must be rigged or within a few hours the ship would be breaking up under the waves rolling on that coast.

An investigation was made, and the rudder itself was found to be sound, though the stock was shattered, leaving the huge steel mass, weighing three tons, swinging from side to side with every wave and threatening to stave a hole in the vessel's stern. To save the ship and the lives of those aboard of her it was necessary that the rudder should not only be secured, but that it be again converted into a means of steering the ship. In other words, there were two dangers of equal importance—the breaking of the ship's plates and being driven ashore.

The captain conceived a plan, but owing to the rolling of the ship did not consider its execution feasible. It was to make fast two chains, one on each side of the stern, to a ring on the outer edge of the rudder. Had the vessel remained on an even keel this ring would have been about four feet under water. As she pitched sometimes it was high in the air, sometimes far down below the surface. At the rudder's rise a man could be lowered on to it in the hope that he might put the chains through the ring, but before he could do so he would be buried many feet in the brine.

The captain lined the crew up on deck, told them of his plan, admitting that several men might be lost in the attempt, and called for volunteers. Half a minute passed before a man moved; then the convict stepped forward and said:

"I'd rather be drowned down there than go back to prison. I'll make an attempt."

"If you succeed," said the captain, "you'll never return to your stripes if I can help you."

One end of a rope was attached to the end of the mizzen boom, the other end being looped under the convict's shoulders. Just before he was lowered he said:

"Tell the world that I, Arnold Turner, convicted of a bank defalcation, about to die, declare my innocence. I know the guilty person, but decline, as I have always declined, to tell."

Turner stood on the gunwale and as the stern rose was quickly lowered with a wire rope and, perching himself on the rudder, endeavored to pass it through the ring. Before he could do so the stern descended, bearing him with it. Necks were craned over the rail to see, when the rudder rose again, if he would still be there. Few believed that he would. But as the stern came up there he was, his knees pressing the vessel's sides, his hands clutching the ring.

A wave swung the rudder to starboard, and the man on it would have been dashed against the side of the ship had he not saved himself by throwing himself on the other side. Before it was swung in the reverse direction down he went again toward the bottom of the ocean. When he came up, holding the ring by one hand, he tried to pass the rope through it, but the rudder was not still long enough for him to do so. He was not only becoming benumbed with the cold bath, but must be ever watchful to avoid being banged against the side of the vessel, which would, to say the least, have dislodged him.

And so he continued to fight for the lives of the fifty or more people slowly drifting toward the breakers, whose distant roar could now be faintly heard above that of the wind. Every time he was carried down he came up with shorter breath and more exhausted. But every time he renewed his attempt to put the rope through the ring of the swaying rudder. Then, when he had failed and gone down again, on rising he let go the ring to rest, swinging, soaked with ice water and pierced by the cold wind.

At last, watching his opportunity when the ship plunged and the stern rose, swinging with the ring, he grasped at it, caught it and this time passed the rope through it.

Half his work had been done.

Another wire rope was given him, but how could he hope, having lost so much of his strength and benumbed by the cold, to succeed when it had taken so long to attach the first rope? It was a period of terrible suspense for those drawing near those dreadful breakers, whose roar was now every moment growing louder. Again he made his dives; again he clung to the rudder, watching to avoid being dashed against the ship, trying to put the second rope in place.

And so, sometimes swinging at the end of his rope and sometimes taking his cold baths, he kept on trying. The knowledge that lives depended upon his success gave him strength, but whenever he felt that he could not endure another swing in the blast or another dive in the ocean he would think of that life behind bars which was dethroning his reason and he would persevere.

At last a feeble call from below announced to those above that the second wire rope had been passed through the ring. To the ends of these ropes those on deck passed heavy chains, which the convict shackled in place, and when this was done he was drawn up.

As he appeared above the taffrail a shout was raised. But he did not hear it. The moment his work was done he fainted. Liquor was poured down his throat, and he was hurried below. There he was stripped of his soaked clothing and put into hot blankets.

While he had been at his work men on deck had lashed a boom across the poop, projecting on each side. The rudder chains were passed through pulley blocks at each end of the beam and around a drum made by boarding over the stearing gear. The moment the ends of the chains were attached to the ring the rudder was made serviceable, and the ship was turned from the white line where now, but a mile away, the mad waves were tossing their heads as if disappointed at losing their prey.

When Turner came on deck again he was dressed in a suit of the first mate's clothes, and every one pushed forward to grasp his hand and shower blessings upon him. Each and every person vowed not to betray him, and some suggested means of obtaining a pardon. But Turner told them that he preferred to remain aboard the ship, which, after touching at New York, was to sail for a foreign land. So great was his dread of a return to prison that he determined to lose himself in a country where he would not be known.

Under the improvised steering gear the ship weathered the gale and made her way to Philadelphia, where she put in for repairs, and her passengers, going ashore, took a land route to their different destinations. Before leaving the ship they held a meeting and collected a considerable sum to be paid the man who had saved their lives. But when they came to turn the gift over to him he declined it, saying that he did not need money beyond what he might be supplied with from friends who knew him to be innocent of any crime and who would gladly furnish him with all his necessities.

Turner remained aboard the vessel during her stay at Philadelphia and while she touched at New York. He occupied a cabin of one of the mates, where he kept himself hidden while the ship was in port. Then when her prow was turned eastward he came out and rejoiced in being once more a free man.

Years after the convict's escape the person who had perpetrated the crime for which Turner had been imprisoned, on promise of indemnity, owned himself to be the guilty party. Then Turner accepted a pardon.

EGG SHOW AT COLLEGE

Poultry to Have Prominent Place During Farmers' Week.

Poultry will be given a prominent place on the program for Farmers' Week at Pennsylvania State College, December 19th-24th. The services of Dr. C. P. Morse, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C., have been secured. Dr. Morse is one of the best authorities on poultry diseases. His lectures will be illustrated. Pennsylvania's well known poultry judge and lecturer, W. Theodore Wittman, will lecture and place the awards in the poultry and egg show. The complete program will be issued soon.

In connection with Farmers' Week exercises, the Division of Poultry announces a dressed poultry and market egg show. Fowls fatted at the Station by different methods and on different feeds, will be displayed, dressed and ready for market. Demonstrations will be given in killing, dry picking and packing for market. The display of market eggs is expected to be an interesting and instructive feature and all poultry keepers who comtemplate attending these exercises are requested to bring one or more dozens of their best eggs for the display. There will be no entry fees and no prizes, but ribbons will be awarded. Eggs will be the property of the exhibitors and will be retained if requested, but right is reserved to open one or more in each dozen in judging.

First and second ribbons will be awarded as follows:

SECTION 1, HENS:
Best dozen brown eggs.
Best dozen white eggs.
SECTION 2, PULLETS:
Best dozen brown eggs.
Best dozen white eggs.
SECTION 3:
Largest and heaviest dozen.
SECTION 4:
Best dozen eggs of any variety.

It is hoped that the breeders will take advantage of the opportunity offered in Section 4 to make display of eggs laid aside by different breeds and varieties and ribbons will be awarded for the best dozen eggs and breed or variety where there are two or more entries.

In awarding ribbons, the judge will consider the same shape and purity and uniformity of color, cleanliness and texture of shell, freshness, condition and color of yolk, albumen, etc. Double yolked and mis-shapen disqualified, except in Section 3.

Mrs. John B. Meek and two children, of State College, are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Hartsock, of near Martha. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Meek was Miss Mable R. Hartsock.

The engine operating the fan in the heating plant at the new High School building, broke down on Monday and it was found necessary to dismiss the scholars until a new piece of machinery is received from Buffalo, N. Y.

W. H. Kerstetter, of State College, was a pleasant visitor to "The Republican" office on Saturday. Desiring to secure a live, hustling newspaper, Mr. Kerstetter had himself enrolled as a subscriber to "The Republican."

Mrs. G. W. Etter, formerly Mrs. Edward Barry, who has been critically ill in the Germantown hospital, Philadelphia, has so far recovered that she was this week removed to her home. This will be pleasing news to her numerous friends.

One of our new subscribers in the last few days is J. F. Fields, of Scotia, Merrill Williams, another of the valuable men at the Scotia mines, also had his name entered on our mailing list, so that both will receive "The Republican" during the coming year.

Horton Ray prides himself on being an up-to-date hotel man, but from this time on he may justly lay claim to being a much more successful hunter than some of the old-timers. Last week he spent a day or two with the Quigley hunting party, in the Scootac region, returning home on Saturday night with a fine bunch of pheasants.

Robert A. Cassidy, of Canton, Ohio, spent a few days in town last week, departing for home on Saturday. We were not a bit surprised when he arrived in town, notwithstanding his positive assurance, when he was here but a short time ago, that he hardly expected to see Bellefonte again for many months. Truth of the matter is that this grand old man belongs here and once he gets on a train he quite naturally drifts this way.

It is with pleasure that we acknowledge receipt of a letter, enclosing a crisp one dollar bill and an order to send "The Republican" during the coming year to Don McEwen, of Homestead, who is well and popularly known at Unionville and who recently visited friends at that place. The first copy Mr. McEwen received was the extra edition of "The Republican", exclusively publishing the confession of Bert Delige.

We are very glad to place on our list of regular readers the names of John Jones and George W. Williams, whose faces are familiar among that happy group of people making up the hospitable community of Scotia. Here's hoping, Mr. Jones and Mr. Williams, that ere sundown today you will have had your share and more of the famous American bird and that each Thanksgiving will be all the more prosperous for you.

Fred J. White, one of our regular readers at Scotia, last week complimented us by advancing his subscription another year. D. G. Daywalt, another of our regular readers and friends at Scotia, also paid us a nice tribute by orrdering his subscription advanced a year. We wish to express our appreciation to both Mr. White and Mr. Daywalt, assuring them that during the coming year they will receive in "The Republican" all the news going.

We feel that we have the right to be proud of the manner in which our list of regular readers is growing. What is especially gratifying is the fact that we are taking on a most desirable class of subscribers. Among those recently enrolled as subscribers for the coming year are Harry Williams, Chester Young and James Hillard, three of the men who are employed at Scotia and whose worth is duly appreciated by their employers. It is our hope that they will find "The Republican" all that it should be to deserve their support and that all three will continue to be regular readers for many years to come.

His many patrons will be glad to find him at the old stand, which couldn't be just quite the same without our own Beck.

PRESBYTERIAN FAIR

Splendid Program Arranged for Big Event, Dec. 1—2.

An elaborate and especially interesting program has been prepared for the fair and entertainment to be held in the chapel of the Presbyterian church, on Thursday and Friday, December 1 and 2. The fact that it will be under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society is assurance of its success.

MANY MEN make money by reading advertising suggestions; and many more make mistakes by not reading them. It will pay you to read this. The subject is either very tiresome, or very interesting, according to how well it's understood. $34.00 invested each year for 20 years at 3 per cent. compound interest will amount to $941.00. That's what a savings bank would pay you. Not a big return, but a pretty safe one. If you could at the same time be insured for $1000 covering a death contingency, and only paid out $34.00 a year and received $941.00 in cash, just the same as in the savings bank, it would be interesting, would it net? Benjamin Clothes

When it's turkey time it's clothes time. Thanksgiving naturally suggests thoughts of feasting, of sports of "dressing-up." It is a season of social and business activity, and when it is with us we should all be comfortably and correctly clothed.

Let us suggest that now while the season is comparatively young, that you become familiar with Benjamin Clothes, their high quality and their clever style. Possibly Thanksgiving has brought to your mind the question of purchasing an overcoat. Possibly a heavy suit would be more to your liking. In either case if you actually want satisfactory clothes and authentic N. Y. Style, come to our shop and inspect these particularly high class Made in N. Y. garments.
